Life-A Song. BY J. C. HAGEN. Let posts sing.

And sages bring The best the rwits can horrow, To prove this life A scone of stole, A scene of strile and surrow.

With some, alast The world may pass For what these worthes take it; But much to me It seems to be The very thing we make it.

Though grinf and gloom At times may loom On every side appaing. And wrong coming in Where right hath neen A cross our puthway falling.

Yet not a wrong Hath life so strong But hone ty can right it, And not a path So dark it hath But cheeriulness can light it,

Let not in grief Life's moments, brief, Then foolishly be wasted; With all its core. It hath its share. Of joy, would we but taste it.

Farewell, but hot Porever. Forever means time out of date. Of which feels make but laughter, For if we part forever here. We'll surely meet hereafter.

Then dry those tears, my lovely maid, In his we only sever-I've though we now must say farewell! Tis not tarewell forever.

We have received a copy of the Brownsville Fing of the 22d, from which we take the subjained article :

EVENTS AS THEY TEAMSPIRED --- On the 5th of December, 1850, about midnight the three companies so long heralded as coming from Fort Clark, two of artillery and one of cavairy, came under the command of Major, Hentzelman. They proved to be of the best material in officers and men, but rather low in number - the fault of the commander of the Department or of the Secretary of War, or both.

On the 5th, a party of thirty of Cortinus men took a youth prisoner, within half a mile of the plaza, and took from him his saddle and bridie, releasing his horse because it mas worthless, and himself because he was a Mexican.

Some days afterwards news was brought n that a cart, containing about two thouand dollars' worth of government property. clothing, blankets, ammonition, and which had been lest behind to come in at leisure -it was an ox cart - had been laken by one of Cortines' bands, and a soldier of the United States who had been left to guard it had been killed.

Os the 14th, necessary preparations having been completed, and the rangers under Tobin having reported to Major Hentzelman their readiness to co-operate, the military started up to find and attack Cortinas. There were 142 regulars and 125 rangers. Tuey started about 5 o'clock A. M., and after a march, fatiguing to artillery men who were on foot, of thirteen miles, they came upon a body of the enemy, some two hundred strong, opened a fire on them with two 24 pound howitzers, which was answered by Illinois, this alternoon, and elected four del. the latter was silenced, and the regulars on piece, but the Mexicans got it away; were A resolution passed affirming the Cincin- pursued as soon as the rangers and cavalry. themselves subuscaded and dismounted to clear the chapperal, when the enemy got of
